When the Morns Are Getting Cool.
When the morns are getting cooler
An' the harvest days are nigh,
An' the Bob White whistles cheerful
From the meadow lot close by,
When the golden pun-kins glimmer
With a shining of the frost,
An' your soul goes jest a driftin'
Through the woods in sweet dreams
lost.

Then I like to get up soon—
All the world seems mine to rule—
When the autumn air is rich an' rare
An' the morns are gettin' cool.

When the morns are getting cooler,
An' there's frost upon the groud,
When the leaves are gold an' crimson
Are a driftin' driftin' down,
Oh, I love to seek the woodlands
Where the haw an' wild grape grow
In the olden, golden glory
Of the fall time's lively glow.

Then I like to get up soon—
To sleep late man's a fool—
When the autumn air is rich an' rare
An' the morns are gettin' cool.

The Newton Enterprise says: "Sunday was the 87th anniversary of Mrs. Elizabeth Carpenter, widow of John Carpenter, and without her knowledge, and while she was at church, her family gathered at the historic home two miles from Newton and spread one of those dinners you read about. Children and grandchildren and great-grandchildren were there with other relatives and friends—half a hundred of them; and everybody enjoyed the event. Mrs. Carpenter, in spite of her advanced years, is strong and 'peppy,' as one said, and the best garden in the county this summer and works around the house constantly. People who attended the celebration of her 83rd birthday said Sunday she wasn't a minute older in appearance and, in fact, looked better and stronger than she did at that time. The large gathering wished her many happy returns, in which her friends everywhere will join.

Mr. Z. B. Buchanan, who went to Washington last week with Mr. H. H. Prince, has returned to the city and reports that Mr. Prince explained everything satisfactorily to the District of Columbia officials regarding a $75 check. It was simply a case of misunderstanding in which the Hickory gentleman was put to not a little inconvenience. On his arrival in Washington Mr. Prince explained the situation, and he was not even taxed with the costs. His friends feel that he was placed to a great deal of inconvenience for nothing. Mr. Prince had simply given his check with instructions that it be held until another check was sent in its place, but his instructions were not complied with.

PLEASED WITH SCORE

Davidson, Sept. 28.—The football team arrived from Lexington, Va., reporting nice treatment and satisfaction on their part with the score, considering the known strength of Washington and Lee and the further fact that the Red and Black has been forced to play so many new men. The W. & L. line, practically all experienced and tried players, outweighed the Davidson line by some 20 or 30 pounds, the latter averaging near 190 and the Carolinians between 165 and 170.
